

Citizens Against Pollution v. Ohio Power

Bailey Glasser served as lead trial counsel for citizens' group in environmental lawsuit against Ohio Power. The dispute centered on sulfuric acid emissions from AEP's Gavin Power Plant, and involved dozens of depositions, multiple experts in toxic air emissions, and a complicated regulatory scheme at the intersection of RCRA and CERCLA. After years of litigation and a two-day trial, the case resulted in a creative consent decree which provided relief otherwise unavailable in a trial.
