

Judge Approves $143M Settlement with Columbia Gas

03.16.2020

On March 12, Massachusetts Superior Court Judge James F. Lang approved an “historic” $143 million class action settlement providing significant compensation to victims of the September 2018 Merrimack Valley gas explosions caused by Columbia Gas. Judge Lang noted that the Settlement, negotiated by Bailey Glasser partner John Roddy and co-lead counsel from Grant & Eisenhofer and Morgan & Morgan is “about four times larger than the next largest state court class action settlement in Massachusetts and in fact greater than the next eight combined.”

The Settlement was crafted over six months of mediated negotiations. “From the inception of this case our goal was always to get the most money to those who suffered most,” said Roddy. The Court praised the Settlement’s design, noting that “the majority of compensation will appropriately go to those who are most adversely impacted by the event, those in or near the impact zone.” An average family of four from the roughly 40,000 claimants will recover more than $8,000. Businesses and those with extraordinary claims can recover tens of thousands more.

The judge also noted that the fees lead counsel sought were modest given the outcome. “Compared to awards in other cases the fees request here is below, and perhaps well below, the usual.”

Attorneys

John Roddy

Practice Areas

Catastrophic Personal Injury

Catastrophic Personal Injury - Gas Explosions